Diyixian.com secures licence to deliver internet services

Greater China internet services provider Diyixian.com last week became the first mainland joint-venture company to obtain a nationwide value-added telecommunications licence.

Diyixian.com founder and chief executive Lap Man said the licence entitles the company to deliver internet protocol-based virtual private network, call centre and internet data services to enterprises across the country. Founded in 1999 in Hong Kong, Diyixian.com has more than 6,500 corporate connections in Greater China and other markets in Asia. Bien Perez
